THE MENSTRUATION GIRLS

SOMEONE IS ON THEIR PERIOD...

EVERYTHING YOU NEED TO KNOW (AND MORE) ABOUT MENSTRUATION #NOFILTER

Is hiding your tampons on your way to the bathroom normal behaviour? Should you see the doctor about your period cramps? The Menstruation Girls leave no question unanswered. In Someone is on their period... Honorata van den Akker and Lieke Smets will tell you all you need to know about your menstruation. Even if you haven't had your period yet. For example, they discuss hormones, the seasons of your cycle, birth control, perfumed pads, menstrual cups, practical tips for inserting tampons, and the difference between your vagina and your vulva. Goodbye menstruation taboos! Also, Honorata and Lieke share their own personal period stories. And those of eleven other people. Because it's time we openly talk about it.

RUUD POS

'These girls handle things like pros. [...] Humour and honesty are their most important weapons.' – Trouw

'The Menstruation Girls put any feelings of shame about our periods to bed for good' – Eva Jinek, talkshow host

HONORATA VAN DEN AKKER AND LIEKE SMETS started the Menstruation Girls together, due to the PMDD-diagnosis of Honorata and the extreme menstrual pain of Lieke, and by doing so founded a menstruation empire that includes the Menstruation Girls podcast, an online magazine, an Insta-account and this book. And they are just getting started. It can certainly feel a little awkward sometimes, but that's exactly what they are trying to change: menstruation needs to be a subject we can openly talk about. Honorata is also an illustrator and Lieke is a communication professional.

THE ITALIAN PRINCESS

THE RESTLESS LIFE OF MARIANNE OF ORANGE-NASSAU

Marianne of Orange-Nassau (1810-1883), the infamous daughter of King William I, is the least known by far of the princesses of the Dutch royal family. At the age of twenty she married her first cousin Albrecht, but the marriage was deeply unhappy. Marianne ran away and reinvented herself as a freethinking art collector, composer and traveller. The discovery that she was having an affair with her coachman was explosive. After many peregrinations she moved into Villa Celimontana in Rome, which she transformed into a refuge for Dutch artists and a cultural salon for the higher social circles. In that sun-drenched yet shadowy world she decided she no longer could, nor should, keep her biggest secret to herself.

RUUD POS

VILLA DE WARTBURG

THE STORY OF A FAMILY AND A HOUSE FULL OF RELIGIOUS REFUGEES

Loes Hegger grew up in a family of seven children. After her father left his monastery, he and his wife decided to receive lapsed priests into the family. De Wartburg, named after Martin Luther's castle – became a place of asylum. The need was great. Those leaving monastic life lost both status and identity, and furthermore they were cast out by family and friends. Some even feared for their lives. People streamed in from all over the world, like Renato from Italy, Aniano from Spain, Orlando from Venezuela, Gust from Belgium and Thottil from India. Sixty years after the opening of De Wartburg in 1962, Hegger reconstructs her unusual childhood in an assured literary style. She investigates the eventful life of the former priests and describes how their decision to leave the silence of the monastery brought them to a large family in a Dutch village. It was a lively community with weddings, babies and unusual habits. Their personal stories are linked to social developments in politics, culture and religion, enabling the book to paint a revealing picture of how history is reflected in the lives of ordinary people.

THAT ONE PUPIL

TEACHERS ON THE PUPILS WHO CHANGED
THEIR VIEWS FOREVER

Which pupil made you look at your profession differently? Most teachers don't need to think for very long in order to answer that question. The girl who rang my doorbell one evening, they'll say. That pupil who wanted to come and live with me. That kid with the knife. The lad who deradicalized in my classroom. The one we decided to give the benefit of the doubt. They are the children discussed in the interviews Rik Kuiper publishes every week in his series 'That One Pupil' in de Volkskrant – cheerful, touching or moving stories that take the reader into the classroom, through the door that usually remains shut. They show what education is all about: the relationship between teacher and pupil. The stories collected here show the dilemmas teachers struggle with, the doubts they experience and the things they've got wrong in the past. They are also about what the teachers themselves have learnt. What did they start to do differently after having that one pupil in their classroom?

THE EMPTY SKY

A SHORT PHILOSOPHY OF LONELINESS

The word 'loneliness' is doing the rounds. Worried policymakers are taking steps to 'combat' loneliness among isolated elderly people and gaming youth. The concept itself, however, is little researched. In her new book, Marjan Slob presents 'loneliness' as the unpleasant feeling you get when experiencing an absence of interconnectedness. But loneliness is also a power. When you're lonely you suffer from what isn't there, which shows that you are capable of self-reflection and imagination. Slob makes this idea easy to grasp with the help of ideas from major thinkers including Blaise Pascal, Daniel Dennett and Simone de Beauvoir, but also from novels, films and pop songs. She playfully explores loneliness through phenomena like stage fright, masks, selfies, space travel, and primping and preening in the ladies toilets – with David Bowie as a guide who knows how you can play with your inescapable sense of being lost.

Shortlisted for Socrates Challenge Cup 2020

'The Empty Sky is a extremely rich book that makes you reflect upon your own situation, your own identity, your own happiness and unhappiness, your own loneliness. It does not give you ready-made answers, but makes you think deeply about yourself and the people around you. Comforting' – Trouw

'Beautifully written' – NRC

'In The Empty Sky philosopher Marjan Slob delves into loneliness, a growing problem in our societies that does not seem to be age-related. Loneliness has other forms besides just that lost feeling that results from a lack of connectedness.' – Margriet

'A scintillating and quirky book about loneliness, surprisingly multidimensional in scope. Supplely and attractively written.' – Jury report for the shortlist Best Spiritual Book of 2021

HOMAGE TO A GOAL-SCORING MACHINE

On 14 January 2021, Klaas-Jan Huntelaar came on in the 89th minute of a soccer match between FC Twente and Ajax. The score at that point was 1-1. Ajax had made nineteen vain attempts to force a second goal. Thirty-seven-year-old Huntelaar ran onto the pitch and within four minutes he made it 1-2 and then 1-3. Illustrative of the striker's eagerness is the fact that he scored more than 400 goals during his career, making him the first Dutch footballer ever to pass the 400-goal mark for club and country.

In Klaas-Jan Huntelaar, a range of prominent authors pay homage to this goal-scoring machine. Their stories take us to a great list of clubs where the striker excelled and together they form a full account, narrative and anecdotal, of a glittering career.

But what actually happened eighty years ago? Bernhard's father wasn't allowed to marry the half-Jewish woman he loved, because the family firm was dependent on the German war industry. Did 'The Four Elements' play a part even back then?

For Leo Spier this delicate case is an immense challenge, not only because of his Jewish background but also because he finds himself up against Christine Lavergne, a French lawyer with whom he has a past.

Now aged seventy, Eduard Wakker recently moved into an apartment complex for people of sixty-five and over. The highpoint of his week is participating in the working group Rituals After the Death of a Fellow Resident. His wife died a year and a half ago. Eduard knows that life simply goes on. And that it isn't easy. But he could never have suspected that the sense of loss would be so great. He makes notes and tries to commit their shared happiness to paper. His memories take him back to their holidays in Italy, where they were married. With his friend and fellow resident Wally, Eduard often walks from the flat to the café and back. They check their phones to count how many steps they've totted up. They talk about their lives and the paths they have taken, and as Wally's memory declines, Eduard gradually wins his life back from his wife's death.
